Justin Trudeau's new post at the head of the federal Liberal party is considered a big win for the likes of Sid Wilson.

Wilson, a Western University student and executive vice-president of the school's Liberals club, expects Trudeau to home in on issues that matter most to students and young families.

"I think with his background in education, he is someone who understands and can respond to issues that are important to youth," Wilson, 22, said on Sunday as Trudeau secured the leadership in a landslide. "He is the first leader in probably 10 to 15 years who resonates with youth."

That enthusiasm was clear when Trudeau stopped at Western in February. "The difference was a room full of 600 people

"This is the last stop of this campaign but it is the very first stop of the next one," Trudeau told hundreds of Liberal supporters in downtown Ottawa.

He implored Liberals to end a generation of infighting.

Derrick Shirley is getting ready to put his heart and soul on the line to empower young people.

The 45-year-old London native, youth advocate and author is getting ready to kick off a 8,234-kilometre, cross-country bike ride. He'll leave the Vancouver police station Tuesday and end his journey 75 days later in St. John's, just in time for Canada Day.

During the ride, Shirley will meet with more than 10,000 teenagers, teachers, parents and police officers, asking them a simple question: "What has a teen done to wow you?"

The question is based around the premise that people often need a bit of prompting to realize the positive contributions teens make to their communities and Canada, said Shirley.

Shirley — who grew up in the Forest City and now lives and runs his youth organization, It Takes 2, in St. Thomas — will include the 50 "most captivating" stories he hears on his journey in his next book, The Big Book of Wow! Discovering Exceptional Teens.

A personal journey

Derrick Shirley's cross-Canada bike ride also has a personal side.

- Shirley used to weigh more than 400 pounds and has spent 30 years trying to cut his weight to 210 pounds.
- He's close to that goal and sees the bike ride as the end of his weight-loss journey.
- Visit it2institute.com for more about the tour.

Along with gathering personal accounts, Shirley's ride will serve as a fundraiser for next year's National Tandem Bike Ride for Youth at Risk.

Organized by It Takes 2, the event will see hundreds of 15- to 18-year-old at-risk youths riding tandem bikes while accompanied by a police officer. Youths will be selected from each province for certain legs of the ride, turning the event into a cross-Canada relay.

"There's no way I can expect youth and police officers to ride tandem bikes in a provincial relay across the country if I don't show what it's really like going through that," Shirley said about his own ride. "I can tell them that I know it's going to get tough, that I know their legs are burning, I know the mountains are big, but you just keep going."

NBL. Lightning planning victory celebration

Get out your party shoes, London. The NBL of Canada two-time champs are ready to share their victory with fans.

London Lightning general manager Taylor Brown said a celebration is being planned for Tuesday at Budweiser Gardens.

Players, along with the team's championship trophy, will be on hand for pictures. The last half of the Lightning's 87-80 Friday victory against the Summerside Storm will be shown on the arena's Jumbo-Tron.

While most Lightning players made their way back to London on Saturday, several, along with managers and coach Michael Ray Richardson, were in St. John, N.B., on Sunday for the NBL's all-star game.

The all-star players, along with Richardson, are expected to head home Monday.

A time for Tuesday's celebration hasn't been set, but it will be after the Lightning are honoured at a 4 p.m. city council meeting, Brown said Sunday.

The celebration will be free, Brown noted. After all, the Lightning is London's team.

"The main reason we brought this team to London was to be part of the community and kind of create mentors for the youth, especially the youth basketball community," Brown said.

Canada's polar-bear trade likely aids poachers: Russia

Canada is the only country in the world that allows sport hunting of polar bears. ELISHA DACEY/METRO FILE

Russian officials are becoming increasingly concerned about polar-bear poachers in their country using Canadian documents to disguise illegally hunted pelts.

"I think it is a real problem," said Nikita Ovsyanikov, one of Russia's top polar-bear scientists and a member of the Polar Bear Specialist Group, the leading international research consortium on the animals.

Ovsyanikov claims that Canadian documents required to bring hides into the country are being pulled off shipments and sold separately. The certificates are then applied to skins from Russian bears to make them appear as if they have been legally hunted and imported.

Canada is the only country in the world that allows sport hunting of polar bears, which makes it the only country to issue certificates under the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species (CITES) that allow polar-bear products to cross borders.

"I'm aware of two cases where not pelts but certificates were offered for sale on the Internet," Ovsyanikov in an interview with The Canadian Press from Moscow. "The price was $1,000, so it was quite a profitable business."

Russian officials, supported by the International Fund for Animal Welfare, used concerns over the Canadian documents to argue that all trade in polar-bear parts should be banned at the recent CITES meeting in Bangkok.

Environment Canada said it has been monitoring the allegations but has no knowledge of its documents being misused.

Demand

Polar-bear hides sell in Russia for up to $50,000, researchers say.

- Such pelts are increasingly popular among Russia's elite. Canadian auction houses have said they can't meet demand for the hides, most of which go to Russia.

Two other measures will be extended by one year: Gun owners who let their possession-only licences expire will still be allowed to re-apply without having to pay to go through a safety course; as will an amnesty on criminal charges for failing to license or register non-restricted weapons for people "who were taking steps to comply."

Thousands of people demonstrated against the Spanish monarchy Sunday to demand the return of a democratically elected head of state — another blow for embattled King Juan Carlos. The marchers thronged a central square in Madrid on the 82nd anniversary of the establishment of Spain's last democratically elected republic, which was overthrown by an army uprising that led to a civil war and the dictatorship of Gen. Francisco Franco. ## Somalia. Militants launch deadly attack in capital

A barrage of bullets and two car-bomb blasts rattled Mogadishu on Sunday when nine al-Shabab Islamic extremists stormed Somalia's main court complex, officials said, in a two-hour attack that shows the country's most dangerous militant group may be down but not defeated.

A preliminary death toll stood at 16, including all nine attackers. The assault was the most serious in Mogadishu since al-Shabab was forced out of the capital in August 2011.

Al-Shabab's influence appears to be on the decline, but Sunday's attack proved they are still capable of pulling off well-planned, audacious assaults.

The top UN official for Somalia, Augustine P. Mahiga, said he was shocked and outraged by the attack. Mahiga said the total number of dead wasn't clear, but that reports indicated that "many innocent civilians were killed including women and at least one child."

Copyright collective to battle universities

Whose lines are they anyway? Expert says legal action intended to 'scare' schools into re-licensing with agency

There's a battle brewing in the world of Canadian academia.

On one side stands Access Copyright, a collective which has provided institutions access to a pool of protected intellectual work for more than two decades while distributing royalties to the writers, artists and publishers it represents.

On the other is a group of universities who no longer feel the need to pay for the services offered by the collective, opting instead to navigate the world of intellectual-property rights without a middle agent.

Simmering tensions are now threatening to boil over as Access Copyright takes one of Canada's largest universities to court — a move some see as a warning to others who've ended relations with the agency.

Access Copyright is claiming Toronto's York University, which opted out of an agreement with the collective, has improperly been reproducing and authorizing the copying of protected works.

The issue goes beyond a single institution though.

To combat unauthorized copying, Access Copyright has also filed two applications to the Copyright Board of Canada requesting tariffs that would require schools and universities that don't have an agreement with Access Copyright to pay to use works the agency handles the rights for.

Institutions wouldn't have to pay the tariff if they have direct licence agreements with publishers, use openly accessible work or copy a portion of a work small enough to be considered "fair dealing."

The entire situation could have wide-ranging implications for students and educational institutions across the country.

"At the end of the day, if Access Copyright is successful — although I have to say that based on where the law is at, that seems unlikely — we're talking about millions and millions of dollars being paid by taxpayers to this group," said Michael Geist, a University of Ottawa law professor who is an expert on intellectual property.

The deal at issue, effective until December 2015, requires institutions to pay $26 per full-time student annually — an increase from a previous rate of $3.38 per full-time student plus a 10-cents-per-page royalty for copying protected works.

Porter. Fewer hurdles expected for Toronto island airport's new jets

Porter Airlines' expansion plans may be headed for months of turbulence, but not the fierce opposition it faced a decade ago to change at the waterfront airport, says a political observer.

On Wednesday, the airline announced it had placed a conditional order for 12 Bombardier CS100 jets, with 18 options worth about $2.11 billion. The aircraft will allow it to fly to Los Angeles, Florida, Calgary and the Caribbean from Toronto.

The plan stirred vocal opposition from local political and community leaders. But University of Toronto assistant professor Zack Taylor said this time around, the success of the airline may blunt some of the outcry. "This airport is a lot less threatening to people than it used to be," said Taylor, whose focus is on local politics. He said people have become used to the service, except perhaps island residents and those in nearby condos.

He said other issues will likely dominate the next municipal election. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Tax-haven lists prompt disclosures

Wealthy Canadians with money stashed overseas have come forward in droves to confess after secret lists began circulating with the names of people apparently evading taxes in foreign banking havens.

The CRA has seen the number of disclosures rise dramatically since 2007, when it received a list from Liechtenstein naming 106 Canadians with accounts in secretive banks there. The agency in 2010 received another list from France with information about more than 1,000 Swiss accounts linked to Canadians.

Redline sees growth in its 'digital oilfields'

Redline Communications is aiming to be a pioneer in the "digital oilfield."

The company provides oil and gas producers with a secure, high-capacity wireless communication network to monitor their operations in harsh or remote areas.

"The digital oilfield is a brand new industry, a nascent industry, that we've really taken a hold of and we're growing very well," says Redline CEO Eric Melka.

Last year, half of Redline's $50 million US in revenues came from the oil and gas industry. Melka says a digital connection to an oilfield allows a company to remotely monitor and manage it in real time.

For example, Redline can build a network in an oilfield that can handle phone calls between staff, transfer files and share data as well as monitor drilling and production and do video surveillance.

Melka, who has been restructuring and refocusing Redline over the past three years, notes that oilfields are too big and remote to monitor by cellphone or short-range WiFi.

"So the networks with our customers are growing," Melka said. THE CANADIAN PRESS

IT OUGHT TO BE ABOUT AUTISM

The numbers continue to rise.

When it comes to autism diagnosis, the prevalence rate is now one in 94, according to Autism Ontario.

In other words, more children than ever before are living with autism spectrum disorders, neurological conditions that hamper brain development in the areas of social interaction and communication.

But, of course, it's not just children who are affected. After all, a child with autism grows up to be an adult with autism.

While a great deal of money has been poured into early intervention and treating autism in children, resources are relatively scarce when it comes to supporting adults.

That's something the folks with Bridging the Gap are trying to change.

"There hasn't been the same kind of focus on adults as there has been on young children," said Julie Knights-Thomson, one of the group's co-founders and a teacher at Fanshawe College. "And we've had students come into our program and say, 'It's great to learn about kids, but we also want to work with adults. What are the opportunities with adults?'"

URBAN COMPASS

Bridging the Gap was formed after co-founders Carmen Hall and Knights-Thomson organized a conference last year. Attended by representatives from a host of area agencies along with parents of people living with autism, the conference was a day of brainstorming on topics such as housing, health and employment.

"We had people there who were really passionate," Knights-Thomson said. "And out of that day, we learned that people were really interested in employment."

The Fanshawe professor says she heard loud and clear from adults with autism that they want to have gainful employment and be recognized for their skills. But, they're often intimidated by the corporate culture, which can lead to a loss of faith in their abilities.

Meanwhile, parents, not surprisingly, said they simply want the best for their adult children.

"The parents see potential," Knights-Thomson said. "They want their kids to be motivated and to find meaningful employment and maybe work on those relationship skills with others."

With the focus of employment in mind, Bridging the Gap and its 20 executive members formed five subcommittees, each with a specific area to address.

There's a group involved in preparing individuals with autism for existing jobs in the community and there's another that's been tasked with educating employers on the large population of autistic people who are willing and able to work.

The most active subcommittee to date has been what's dubbed the "vendor group," which is working with young, talented entrepreneurs in the arts community, helping them sell their work. They've already booked seven appearances at events like this summer's Ribfest and the Home County Music and Art Festival.

As a reporter in the Canadian media please take some responsibility in covering issues that affect the daily lives of Canadians.

As I'm sure you are aware, 54,500 Canadians lost their jobs in March, and the government's budget cuts are going to make it harder for Canadians to find work. Finance Minister Flaherty promised the cuts wouldn't affect Canadians, but independent research shows that Human Resources and Skills Development will lose nearly a third of its workforce at a time when Canadians most need training and jobs.

If our government thinks they can hide their plans from public scrutiny they will be more likely to do things that Canadians don't want.

When Prime Minister Harper ran for office in 2006, he promised to clean up Ottawa. He created the Parliamentary Budget Office so Canadians would know what our government is doing with our money. From F-35's to prisons, Kevin Page, our first federal budget watchdog, showed that he could hold government accountable for fiscal mismanagement. But Harper let Kevin Page's term expire just before his government released this secretive and misleading budget, and the entire process to replace him is veiled in secrecy.

A bad show and fresh start for the New Kids

New tour. Jonathan Knight explains what happened when he walked out in the middle of a recent performance

New Kids on the Block member Joey McIntyre says a recent show to promote their upcoming arena tour wasn't their "finest moment."

But he says it's also not indicative of the upcoming stadium performances that will bring them to Canada in June and July. At a recent New York concert, band member Jonathan Knight suddenly walked off stage mid-show, never to return.

During a visit to Toronto, Knight admits he's long battled anxiety issues and that it continues to dog him today.

But he says it's not as serious as it once was, insisting the New York meltdown had more to do with lack of sleep and problems with his "day job" as a real estate broker. It's a career he started when he retreated from the limelight after the group disbanded in 1994.

McIntyre, Knight and fellow members Jordan Knight and Danny Wood were in Toronto to promote their new album 10 and an upcoming tour with Boyz II Men and 98 Degrees. A publi-

McIntyre agreed it wasn't a good time.

"That show wasn't our finest moment. Aside from whatever Jon was experiencing, sometimes we wing it and sometimes we have fun and that's OK but we winged the hell out of that show. And it didn't have a structure and a form and so I really don't think Jon would have done that in an arena show or, you know, in a lot of other shows," McIntyre said. ## Travel tidbit

Power down?

IT'S ALL RELATIVE
Kathy Buckworth,
kathybuckworth.com

A tablet or large screen smartphone is an amazing entertainment and distraction tool when travelling with children, particularly on crowded airplanes, where the "parenting in public" challenges are magnified due to the enclosed space and normally short tempers of the surrounding travellers.

Most planes and some airports still don't have WiFi, so take the time to download games before you leave.

It's also important to remember that all electronics have to be powered down prior to take off and landing, and in some cases this can be half an hour or more. Thirty minutes in "toddler time" is a long time. Don't rely entirely on electronic diversions for the kids, or yourselves.

Take age appropriate reading materials, activities and toys to fill the time. Snacks are a great distraction also, and as there can be unexpected delays, relying on buying food for a hungry little mouth while on board can be risky. Finger foods such as cereal, dried fruit and cut up vegetables can provide tactile and nutritious ways to pass the time.

One final thought: allowing your child to pass the time by practising their soccer kicks on the seat in front of them is not an option. KATHY BUCKWORTH IS AN AWARD WINNING WRITER. VISIT KATHYBUCKWORTH.COM OR FOLLOW KATHY ON TWITTER @KATHYBUCKWORTH.

Julia Sweeney goes from It's Pat to adventures in motherhood

New book. The former SNL star shares her insight into being a mom to an adopted child in If It's Not One Thing, It's Your Mother

JANE BORDEN

Metro World News in New York

Julia Sweeney titled her new memoir after a pillow embroidered with If It's Not One Thing, It's Your Mother, given to her by her mom that she hated until she had a daughter — who now dislikes the pillow herself.

The former Saturday Night Live (It's Pat!) and Broadway (God Said 'Ha!') star writes about her long path to a nontraditional family with insight and warmth.

Also, refreshingly candid humour: She received her adopted child, Mulan, in China, from a man who entered a crowded ballroom holding the baby aloft in the air, while a muzak version of Celine Dion's My Heart Will Go On played from a boom box.

That must've been an overwhelming and complicated moment. Did you even register the humour of it at the time?

Yes! I was so fixated on it that I missed some of the emotional moment. And that, I would say, is something I do.

You write about investigating your genealogy. How has adopting a child affected your thoughts about it?

I've been in conferences about it and they say, "In this room of 300 people, if you go back five generations, you'll have one person in common with all of you." You're related to everyone. It's terribly meaningful. And also completely meaningless. When I adopted Mulan, I felt like I had to not care about my family history. But then I realized I do care.

I just took my niece and nephew to the cemetery and said, "This is your great grandfather." Mulan added, "And my great grandfather." I replied, "Yes!" But then I thought, "Is it?" It's a grey area.

How does Mulan feel about being in your book?

Right now she likes it, but if we butt heads, she'll say, "And I will resent you for the rest of my days because you wrote that book."

Because of the book, does Mulan like the pillow more?

No! She still hates it. And I just looked at it and thought, I should put it in the next bag to Goodwill. Then I remembered, "Oh no, but it's the pillow! I've infused it with all this meaning now. I guess I have to keep it."

New research

Kids say the darndest things

Children learn to swear before they have mastered the alphabet, according to research from scientists in California.

But they are only following the example of adults, said Dr. Melissa Mohr of the University of Stanford.

English language speakers use a swear word for every 140 words they speak — or 0.7 per cent of the time — her research found. And that's why most children know a profanity by the age of one or two. Although, said Dr. Mohr, the level of juvenile swearing really takes off at the age of three and four.

Her book, *Holy Sh*t: A Brief History of Swearing*, says the upper classes are just as likely to swear as anyone else, although those identifying as middle class are less likely to.

1. Heat oven to 300 F. Then in bowl, combine cabbage, onion, wine, vinegar, sugar, pepper flakes and 1/2 tsp salt. Spread evenly over bottom of roasting pan large enough to fit lamb.

2. To make pesto, in processor, combine orange zest and juice, mint, olive oil, cheese, cashews, 1/2 tsp salt and 1/2 tsp of black pepper. Process until blended, then reserve 1/2 cup.

3. Place lamb on cutting board. Starting on a long side, cut meat in half horizontally, but leave 1 inch of meat uncut at other side. Open meat like book, then place piece of plastic wrap over it. Use meat mallet to pound meat to 2 inch thickness.

4. Season meat all over with salt and pepper. Spread pesto over cut side. Starting at one of the long sides, roll lamb into a log with pesto in centre. Use kitchen twine to tie lamb in several spots to prevent it from unrolling. Place lamb over the cabbage mix in roasting pan.

5. In food processor, pulse bread until reduced to soft crumbs. Stir in mustard, then pat mix over outside of lamb. Roast 3 1/2 hours, or until meat is fork-tender. Allow to rest for 15 minutes, then slice meat across roll. Serve alongside braised cabbage from bottom of pan and reserved mint pesto. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Take notes and own your mistakes

Cruise through the critique. Everyone needs feedback, but not everyone faces the facts effectively

CareerBear.com

Your performance review is booked for next week, and you're starting to panic. Remember this: every professional faces criticism, and the way you react to it can help you grow or hinder your success, says Dr. Ilona Jerabek, president and CEO of PsychTests.com. "Constructive criticism is always worth considering regardless of whether you initially agree with it or not."

Here's advice on how to get the most of your next performance review.

Leave your ego at the door
Everyone wants to hear that they're doing a great job. "But we all have flaws and

Take the advice and run with it: "If someone tells you that you can do better, take their advice in good measure because they most likely see some potential that has yet to be realized," says Jerabek. ISTOCK

we need to accept that and realize we won't ever reach perfection," says Jerabek. There will always be something you can improve on. Use feedback to learn what that is.

Be gracious

You're likely going to hear positive comments first, and it's important to pat yourself on the back and let them sink in. "People tend to listen for the worst and pay more attention to that than the positive," says Jerabek.

Actively listen — and learn

Professional growth is based on knowing where you can improve. Listen to criticism with an open mind. Was it a decision you made or a behaviour that you displayed that you don't realize is problematic? If you don't understand a point the appraiser is trying to make, ask for more information. For example: "Can you provide an example of when you felt I didn't handle a project well?"

Make that change

Share the responsibility for evolving

- If you need to make changes (you see how a problem is affecting function of the team or performance of the company or customers), develop a strategy and set goals for next year.
- In figuring out an action plan, be sure to ask for assistance from your boss, such as coaching, additional training or self-help resources.

happened, why it happened, and the consequences. Then, (think about) the steps you will take so something like that never happens again."

Take notes

A performance review is emotionally charged for most people and that can often make you feel flustered. Capture what is being said by taking notes — so you can refer back to them for what was said, instead of what you remember being said.

Precautions. Your home is a valuable asset

With spring underway, it's a time when many Canadians start looking for a new home or thinking about renovations. Either way, it's an ideal time to start thinking about home insurance.

"Your home is your most valuable asset. With severe weather on the rise, it is more critical than ever to ensure that your home is properly protected," says Ralph Palumbo, vice-president, Ontario, Insurance Bureau of Canada (IBC). "If your home is ever damaged or destroyed, it's very important that it is insured to its accurate replacement value. Taking a few insurance precautions now can help get you through a very hectic time if you do need to make a claim."

The IBC recommends:

- Whenever you increase the value of your home through renovations or new content purchases (such as artwork, jewelry), notify your insurance professional as soon as possible to ensure you have adequate coverage.

- Know your policy renewal date and allow yourself at least 60 days to review your coverage with your insurance professional.

- Make a list of key details about your home and contents as that information may be needed when calculating the amount of insurance you need.

- If you are in the process of moving and packing up your possessions, it's an ideal time to do a home inventory. This may help you determine the right amount coverage you need. Take pictures or video your possessions since that information can be helpful in the event of a claim.

- Read your policy carefully. Ask questions. Have your insurance representative explain certain exclusions on your policy. Know what isn't covered.

- In the event you have a claim, know the amount of your policy deductible. Talk to your insurance representative about any deductible adjustments and the impact it could have on your policy.

- Shopping for insurance of any kind is always recommended. It's important to compare prices and products finding the right policy that fits your needs. If you find one that fits your needs better then it's best to wait until your existing policy expires before changing companies to avoid any possible midterm cancellation fees.

INSURANCE BUREAU OF CANADA

You can help combat insurance fraud by reporting any suspicious activity. ISTOCKPHOTO/THINKSTOCK

Steer away from insurance fraud

Take the time. Report the crime. That's the message to consumers from Insurance Bureau of Canada (IBC).

IBC's goal is to reduce insurance fraud. According to the Ontario Auto Insurance Anti-Fraud Task Force Final Report, auto insurance fraud in Ontario is estimated to cost consumers up to $1.6 billion per year in insurance premiums. These estimated costs do not include additional health-care, emergency services and court costs.

"Consumers can help by learning about the different types of insurance fraud and then reporting any suspicious activity," says Rick Dubin, IBC's vice-president of investigations. "When someone makes a false or exaggerated claim, honest policyholders pay for it. We all have an interest in reducing insurance fraud."

Five common types of insurance fraud are:

1. Unscrupulous auto repair shops that intentionally cause additional damage to a vehicle involved in an accident or bill several different insurers for repairing the same prior damage to a vehicle;

2. Medical clinics that ask claimants to sign blank accident benefit forms, then bill insurers for services never provided;

3. Individuals who privately sell a stolen vehicle to an unsuspecting consumer after changing the vehicle identification number to hide its true identity;

4. Collisions that don't seem to make sense, where a driver intentionally causes a collision with an unsuspecting driver and makes it look as if the innocent driver is at fault for the collision;

5. Medical clinics that forge the signatures of legitimate medical practitioners and use their names and college registration numbers without their knowledge or consent on accident benefit forms and then bill insurers for services never provided.

Golf. Aussie Scott makes up for British Open meltdown with steely Masters win over Cabrera in sudden-death

Adam Scott became the first Australian to win the Masters, beating Angel Cabrera on the second hole of a playoff on a soggy Sunday at Augusta National.

The Masters went to a sudden-death playoff for the second year in a row when Scott and Cabrera made matching birdies on the 72nd hole.

They both made par on the first extra hole, returning to No. 18, before Scott rolled in a 12-footer for birdie to win it.

Scott pumped his fists in the air, screaming toward the grey, darkening sky, and embraced caddy Steve Williams, who was on the bag for 13 of Tiger Woods' 14 major titles.

For Scott, this is the first, making up for his major meltdown at last year's British Open, where he bogeyed the last four holes to lose by a stroke to Ernie Els.

"I found my way today," Scott said.

Scott, playing in the next-to-last group, made a 20-foot putt at 18 and celebrated with Williams as if it were over. Cabrera, in the final group, watched from the fairway knowing he had to hit a brilliant shot.

He did.

Cabrera's ball pulled up three feet from the cup for an easy birdie that sent the two players to the playoff tied at 9-under 279.

"That's how golf is," said Cabrera, who was denied his third major title. "I had some issues during the course but I came back."

Crawford outduels Elliot as Hawks stop Blues

Corey Crawford came away with the shutout in this one, not Brian Elliott.

Chicago's goalie stopped 30 shots and Bryan Bickell and Marian Hossa scored to lead the Blackhawks to a 2-0 win over the St. Louis Blues on Sunday, ending Elliott's bid for a fourth straight shutout.

Elliott had shut out the Red Wings, Predators and Wild in succession on the road for a franchise record scoreless run of 189 minutes and 23 seconds. His overall shutout string ended at 214 minutes in the second period.

Jays explore shifting Lawrie to second

With Jose Reyes' injured left ankle exposing their lack of infield depth, the Toronto Blue Jays are experimenting with playing Brett Lawrie at second base as he continues to work his way back to the big leagues from an oblique injury.

Lawrie, who played his first two pro seasons at second in the Milwaukee Brewers farm system, started at the position on Sunday for the Class-A Dunedin Blue Jays.

"Missed playin 2nd!!" Lawrie wrote on Twitter after the game. "Love to have that feel back!!"

If Lawrie looks all right at second, the Jays might use him there when he returns to the club while keeping Jose Bautista at third, general manager Alex Anthopoulos said.

"It's not something we're ready to commit to, it's just more of a chance to do it and this is probably as good a time as any."

Jays fall in Kansas City

Alex Gordon drove home Chris Getz with a single in the ninth inning, and the Kansas City Royals beat the Toronto Blue Jays 3-2 on Sunday.
